

Understand that a national standard for a "no-call" list is being considered by the FCC. It would be far better situation to leave such list to the state level where controls can be more stringent with fewer "interest" groups trying to water down the limitations as will occur if a national standard is attempted. Here in Indiana our list works quite well, Thank You, and going from around twenty telemarketing calls a week to nil is a most pleasant thing. Yes, that may seem a small thing, but it's my telephone with my limitations as I see fit through my own state process.

Thank you for the time.
